Research Interests

In very early stages of my professional career, I have been interested in basic science research. I joined several research groups in the field of DM type I and wounds and burns healings. because I think that significant change and major influence can come mainly from early discoveries in the pathophysiology of diseases and disorders. During my residency in child and adolescent psychiatry, I was very interested in the field of ADHD and PTSD, and even led a research project that continues to this day.

In the last two years, after I was exposed to the trauma of refugees on the Greek shorelines, I founded a humanitarian aid organization "Humanity Crew" that provides a psychosocial support for refugees, which some of the activity is the development of research and treatment methods.

Over the past two years, I have been involved in a four-step treatment of refugees. Today, we are conducting several research projects with overseas universities. With the focus on the impact of early intervention in preventing the development of PTSD and other mental disorders
